Citing sources: When do you need to?

• When you use or refer to someone else’s words or ideas.
• When you copy the exact words or a “unique phrase.”
• When you reprint any diagrams, illustrations, charts and pictures.
When is it okay not to cite?

- When you are writing your own experiences, your own observations, your own insights, your own thoughts, your own experimental results, or your own conclusion of a subject.
- When you are using common knowledge.
- When you are compiling generally accepted facts.

When Should You Cite?

Remember, if in doubt, cite it.

Ways to cite your sources

1. Citing your source within your paper.
2. Assembling a list of sources at the end of your paper.

MLA & APA handouts
Citing sources within your paper

Whenever you quote, paraphrase, summarize, or otherwise refer to the work of another.

Parenthetical citations generally include:

- Last name of the author if you are citing an entire work.
- Last name of the author and either a page or paragraph number if you are citing a specific fact or quote.
- Omit author’s name if the name is mentioned in the text.

In-text citation: MLA examples

It may be true that “in the appreciation of medieval arts, attitude of the observer is of primary importance…” (Robertson 136).

Tanner has argued this point (178-85).

In-text citation: APA examples

It may be true that “in the appreciation of medieval arts, attitude of the observer is of primary importance…” (Robertson, 1987, p. 136).

Tanner (1987) has argued this point (pp. 178-85).
Remember…

Within the paper:
The driver said in court that when he looked up from the cell phone he was dialing he was three feet from the car and had no time to stop (Stockwell B8).

End of the paper:
Stockwell, Jamie. “Phone Use Faulted in Collision.”
